

The Pricing Confidence Checklist

A two-page decision tool for quoting from evidence, communicating clearly, and protecting sustainable boundaries.

1 • KNOW THE REAL COST

Pricing begins with financial visibility. Include both direct expenses and the indirect costs required to keep the practice running.

- ☐ I know my monthly direct costs: product, tools, travel, workspace, assistants, and transaction fees.
- ☐ I know my indirect costs: insurance, software, education, marketing, taxes, recovery time, and the salary I intend to pay myself.
- ☐ I know how many paid hours I can realistically deliver without using every available hour.
- ☐ I review these numbers regularly instead of treating pricing as permanent.

RATE-FLOOR CALCULATION

Monthly business cost	Realistic paid hours	Hourly rate floor
$	hours	$

Your rate floor is not the final price. It is the point below which a booking asks the rest of your business to subsidize it.

NOTES FROM THE CALCULATION

Say the Number. Hold the Standard.

Confidence becomes more reliable when the language, policy, and follow-through are already decided.

2 • COMMUNICATE CLEARLY

- ☐ My quote names the scope, price, deposit, due dates, and what would change the total.
- ☐ I can state the number without apologizing, shrinking, or filling the silence.
- ☐ My cancellation, rescheduling, overtime, travel, and add-on policies are written before the booking.
- ☐ Existing clients receive clear notice of a change; the notice is not framed as a negotiation.

WRITE YOUR CLEAN QUOTE SENTENCE

3 • HOLD THE BOUNDARY

- ☐ I have a kind, short response for a request to discount the work.
- ☐ I can offer a smaller scope when the budget is smaller without discounting the same scope.
- ☐ I record who accepts the quote so evidence can answer fear.
- ☐ I will review this checklist after 30 days with real booking data.

Continue in Curls & Contemplation: the book expands pricing into cost analysis, market positioning, diversified income, cash-flow visibility, boundaries, and long-term financial wisdom.

Educational tool only; not financial, tax, or legal advice. curlscontemplation.beauty